The States and BDAC:

What It Means for Local Internet Choice

Has the anti-local choice state “model” code of the FCC’s Broadband Deployment Advisory Committee (BDAC) led to new state barriers to local broadband and public-private partnerships? How can we continue to protect and promote local broadband authority at the state level? Lots of questions for us to address.

Broadband at the Crossroads:

Our Experts Weigh In

Advanced communications can drive and support progress in just about everything that’s important to communities around the world: economic development, education, public safety, health care, democratic discourse and much more. I’m joining other opinionated experts to address issues like what do we need to do next to reap the full benefits of high-speed broadband, where and how should we invest limited public resources, how do we ensure that rural, low-income, disabled and other underserved Americans don’t get left behind?
